FRIDAY EVENING. JULY 12, 1901.

FAIRFAX COUNTY .- While in many counties which have ranked among the foremost in Virginia in point of wealth and population have shown a decrease and population have shown a decrease in these respects under the recent census, Fairfax has made the most gratifying exhibit. Not only has there been a substantial increase in values, but the population is nearly two thousand in excess of what it was when the last census was taken. In the Piedmont and Valley counties the price of land has Valley counties the price of land has been too high for men of moderate means to buy there with the expectation of getbeen too high for men of moderate means to buy there with the expectation of getting a fair return for their investment and labor, consequently they seek homes where land is cheaper and other inducements are presented. Such advantages they find in Fairfax. Not only is land much cheaper here, but is almost or quite as productive as the high priced lands to which we have referred. Moreover our proximity to market is a consideration of great importance, and enables the farmer to cultivate with profit many crop; that cannot be grown to advantage at more remote points. These facts have impressed themselves upon the public, with the result that many people are attracted to the country, and thus contribute to the general prosperity. If we were to hold an agricultural fair every year, the results in this respect would be still more marked. We could give substantial evidence of the productiveness of our soil, and prove to the world that Fairfax is second to no county as a home for the loteligent and industrous farmer.—[Herald, give substantial evidence of the productiveness of our soil, and prove to the world that Fairlax is second to no county as a home for the intelligent and industrous farmer.—[Herald.
